Announcing: Summer 2008 Taglit-Birthright Israel Trip with ALEPH

Go to Israel for Free with ALEPH and Taglit-Birthright Israel! Experience Israel and Jewish Renewal like never before. RENEWAL IN ISRAEL is a 10-day trip designed especially for ALEPH members and friends.

Here is a great opportunity for KHE's 18-26-year-olds to visit Israel this summer. At least three of our younger generation have already participated in Taglit trips to Israel; Amethyst Raybee really praised the trip she joined. ALEPH is the umbrella association for Jewish Renewal. If you have questions, address them to ALEPH (there's a link below).

From ALEPH's publicity:

We will pray at the Kotel, float in the Dead Sea, participate in a traditional Bedouin feast and tour Jerusalem. Our plan is to go during the LAST TWO WEEKS OF JULY. Our special Jewish Renewal focus will add visits with Israeli Jewish Renewal teachers and peacemakers, an ecstatic welcome of Shabbat, the mystical energy of Sfat, chanting, drumming and singing niggunim on the bus, ecological teachings and visits, rituals at the Holocaust Memorial Museum and at the Kotel, sunrise prayers at Masada and more. Israel Outdoors brings an active, engaged focus to the trip that will add memorable components like kayaking, water hiking and dancing on the Galilee. RENEWAL IN ISRAEL is truly a once in a lifetime opportunity.

First-trip participant Amanda Feinstein said: "I secretly hoped I would encounter at least one life-altering moment that would bring me back to my heritage. I was not prepared to be having these experiences on a daily basis. Never before have I gone on a trip where all of my needs felt so met (except for sleep, of course). We were offered prayer and meditation services every morning, tons of exercise during the day, vegetarian food, wonderful leaders and 38 new friends. Although there were so many amazing and memorable moments on this trip, the most meaningful aspect of my experience has been finding a sense of belonging with the Jewish people for the FIRST time in my entire life. Thank you so much to all of the people who made this trip possible, for me and for all of us."

If you or someone you know is Jewish, 18-26, has graduated from high school, and has never been to Israel on an organized trip, fill out ALEPH's showing-of-interest form at:

http://www.aleph.org/al_event.taf?_function=detail&event_id=9

In addition, you will need to register at www.israeloutdoors.com between February 12 and February 28 for the ALEPH Jewish Renewal trip in the drop down menu. First come first served, so go to the site on February 12 if you can.

In My Opinion:

As part of my recent preparation for leading the discussion for Torah study I went to Google and typed in the name of the parsha. For the portion “Va’vigash” out popped 11 pages of sites to visit. I explored just a few, which ranged from strict interpreters of the Torah to the most liberal and secular authorities.

The richness of both the differences and similarities of opinions is one of the things that delights me about this kind of study. Many of the themes of the comments are similar but expressed with different references and vocabulary. Some of my favorite themes are from very different points of view.

Rabbi Cheryl Peretz creates a new New Year’s resolution; she adds to her list “learn from Joseph to find an alternative to revenge.”

A second theme is Joseph’s instruction to his brothers not to quarrel on the way. One rabbi sees this as instruction not to become so lost in discussion that we become divided and lose sight of our shared existence as Jews living in a rich multi-layered cultural community. Another rabbi sees that the brothers’ recriminations for what they should or should not have done in the past might make their journey longer, or lead them astray.

A third theme, maybe my favorite, is about how doing what feels right at the time can have incredible consequences.

As I was enjoying this rich source of Jewish learning in the privacy and comfort of my own home, I remembered that last month I listed a way to learn Hebrew on your computer.

Wow! Suddenly I realized it has become easier and easier to be Jewish in isolation! No need to put up with the cost or politics of a congregation. You can be an informed Jew living on a mountaintop as long as you have the Internet! You won’t have to pay a rabbi, or the utility bills for a synagogue. You can educate your own children! No need to listen to a voice or opinion that you don’t like, or sit through a service that isn’t exactly what you would prefer. No need to spend gas money going to Shul. Besides, there are so many other community activities--who has the time or inclination to bother unless there is a life cycle event or a tragedy?

Sorry, folks! I differ with what I suspect is a growing attitude in our community. Judaism is a religion that was created to be lived face to face with others. It’s tribal in nature, it thrives on discussion and the exchange of ideas. Torah is supposed to be learned as a joint effort.

Our children need to grow in their attachment to other Jewish children. They need, especially in a community where being Jewish is the exception, to feel close and accepting of the other Jewish kids, rather like a community of cousins. They need to know they are not the only family that has these ideals and practices. We need each other; it’s the nature of being human and it’s essential to being Jewish.

Sorry for the rant! I would just like to see more of you in the coming months.

With all good wishes for the secular year,

Carol

A Wonderful Hanukkah 5768

Friday night, December 7, Rabbi Shoshanah led our congregation in a joyful Hanukkah celebration. Participants provided a delicious Shabbat dinner, the children played dreidel, and we ended the evening with a meditative service that celebrated light.

On Sunday the 9th, we had our traditional craft fair and Hanukkah party. Fortunately, the weather cooperated and we could utilize our deck. Deborah Edelman and her committee did a great job; they planned and conducted continuous and entertaining children's activities. Our own musicians--Michael Charnes, Alan Sunbeam, Tony Melville, and Eric Idarius--provided great music. R. Shoshanah told the story of Hanukkah and Michael Kisslinger read two charming books for children of all ages. Many KHE members provided great food. The cleanup committee (Dan Hibshman, Dan Waterman and Steve Levin) did a wonderful job, too. Many thanks to all of you who made that day so special!!!!

Q & A for JCI & R

Jewish Community Information and Referral is a service of the San Francisco-based Jewish Community Federation.

Q: I am concerned about my elderly parents, and would like to explore options for senior activities and housing. Can you tell me where to start the search?

A: Yes, of course we can help. The number of options for housing has grown in recent years. Let's start by sending you senior housing guides and Seniors and the Law. We can refer you to many senior services provided by our Jewish community, including medical support, senior transportation; meals on wheels, cultural and social activities, Holocaust survivor services, long-distance senior care, and help at home.

For more information about senior services and connecting to Jewish life, call JCI & R 415/777-4545 or toll-free within the Bay Area 877-777-JCIR (5247) or e-mail to:

Spielberg Film To Be Shown at Special Interfaith Event

Mark 5 pm, Sunday, January 27 on your calendar for a veggie potluck to be followed by a showing of the Stephen Spielberg film, “The Last Days” at the Seventh Day Adventist Community Center, 151 Cherry St, Ukiah. Kol HaEmek, the Seventh Day Adventists and the Mendocino County Martin Luther King, Jr. Organization (McMLK) are co-sponsoring this evening in connection with Martin Luther King Day (January 21) to provide evidence of what can happen when racism, prejudice, and discrimination hold sway.

“The Last Days” is a documentary which features the true stories of five people who experienced the Nazi roundups of Jews in Hungary toward the end of World War II. In addition to Jews who suffered through this period, the film presents the first-person testimony of a German concentration camp doctor. The photography is at times quite graphic, and visual and verbal witnessing make it nigh impossible for anyone to see the film and deny that the Holocaust happened.

The film was made by the Shoah Foundation, set up by Stephen Spielberg to record eyewitness testimonies of what happened to the Jews of Europe during WWII. Due to its explicit content, the documentary is not recommended for children, but is highly educational for teens and adults. Rabbi Shoshanah will participate in a panel to help give a context for what is shown on the screen.

The initiative for this event comes from Brian Wells, a Seventh Day Adventist who has attended various of our KHE functions. He has been motivated to cut our grass, donate a table and chairs for our deck, purchase the DVD of “The Last Day”, and organize this special showing.

Dear KHE Chaverim,

Studying texts together is a classic form of Jewish learning. I have even heard folks say that this is the quintessentially Jewish form of meditating, although it is certainly not a silent practice. I can recall walking by a cheder (primary religious school) or yeshivah in Jerusalem and being struck by the din of voices emerging from the classrooms. Studying out loud with someone else (“chevruta partner” is the classic term) is not at all the same as learning a text by oneself. The very dynamic of reading out loud, word by word, line by line, and then chewing and deliberating together on what you have just read, is a very different process from silently reading down the page on your own.

I am currently studying two different Jewish texts with rabbinical colleagues in two different states, one in Colorado and one in North Carolina. (I’m not aware of anyone local who has the facility in Hebrew and is interested in studying Jewish texts together. If you fit the bill, please contact me!) We do this by setting aside time to call each other, and then, on the phone, we take turns reading the Hebrew text out loud and translating, and comparing our own translations with the one in hand. Authors often incorporate allusions to other sources in their comments, so then we need to check out the original quotes as well. And then begins the fun of wrestling with the text, and sharing what we understand from it on various levels, and what it prompts in us, and off we go.

Dear KHE Chaverim, (continued)

How much you read is not the essence of the practice. With one partner, we are about midway through our slim volume, and I can't recall when we began, but I wouldn't be surprised if it was two years ago! We are learning (the Hebrew verb lomed means both to study and to learn) "Tomer Devorah", "The Palm Tree of Devorah" by R. Moshe Cordovero, who lived in the 16th Century and whose family came from Spain (making him a Sefardic Jew). He spent most of his life in the northern Israel town of Sfat (also known as Safed), known as a holy center of kabbalah. He studied with R. Yosef Caro, author of the classic Shulchan Aruch guide to living the mitzvot, and then with R. Alkabetz, author of the beloved "L'cha Dodi" song that we sing on Friday eve to bring in the Shabbat.

In "The Palm Tree of Devorah", Cordovero works his way down through the sefirot of the Tree of Life, guiding us to act in the world in accordance with the God qualities which manifest in each sefirah. For a small taste of his approach regarding chochmah, the sefirah of wisdom, he writes: "One's compassion should extend to all creatures, and one should neither despise nor destroy them, for the supernal chochmah extends to all of creation--inanimate objects, plants, animals, and humans" (based on pp. 74-5 of the Targum/Feldheim edition). Cordovero calls on us to seek compassion and blessing for the world, and to regard those afflicted with suffering as if they are our own children (pp. 72-3).

We need to jump three centuries forward to meet the author of the second text I am studying, the Hasidic rebbe known as the Ishbitzer, based on the eastern European locale in which he served as rabbi in the 1800s. He is also known as the Mei HaShiloach, based on his book of the same name, which means "waters of the Shiloach". This name resonates with me, since I have a great fondness for, and familiarity with, this underground spring, which is the original water source of Jerusalem.

The Ishbitzer follows the very popular and classic model of writing commentaries on the weekly Torah portion, and so my chevruta partner and I study the appropriate sections for the week we are in. In fact, we are part of a larger network of rabbis all across the country studying these same writings. We receive weekly e-mails of the relevant Hebrew text, along with a new translation, and commentaries by the translator. When we finished the book of Beresheit (Genesis) last week, we had a conference call open to all of us with the translator, so we are now part of a virtual yeshivah! And the translator is himself a serious (silent) meditator, so his commentaries tend to focus on cultivating awareness and personal insight via silent meditation. And thusly is text study adapted to our modern world of the 21st century, bringing together, via computer and telephone, souls who are thousands of miles apart to meditate noisily on this centuries-old text and then to meditate silently on its meaning in our lives.

B'shalom oovrachah,
Shoshanah
